RETIRING TO PRIVATE LIFE

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland's Departure From the White House.

RATHER A PATHETIC SCENE

They Left the Mansion by the Rear Entrance—Mrs. Cleveland Was Whirled Straight to the Depot and Took Train for Princeton. Her Husband Went Ducking.

The departure of the Cleverlands from the White House was a measure, pathetic. The ex-President and his wife each took their leave from the back or south entrance. It was going in at the front door and out at the back door. Mrs. Cleveland stopped only about five minutes after she had received the new mistress of the Executive Mansion. This, however, was made necessary on account of the delay of Mrs. McKinley in arriving. Mrs. Cleveland's arrangements were made some days ago, provided for her departure from the city at 3:15, and the private car of President Thomson, of the Pennsylvania road, was attached to the train. She had barely time to extend her greetings to Mrs. McKinley, get to the station, although she did go to Mrs. Lamont's home for about five minutes, to say farewell.

As Mrs. Cleveland passed from the winding steps at the south entrance of the house where she had been the "uncrowned queen" for almost eight years, having entered it as a bride and the pride of the nation, she never looked more beautiful in her hand she carried a great bunch of violets, which matched the flowers of her hat and the bodice of her dress. She quickly entered the carriage, and the spirited coachman hurriedly sped toward the westward gate, taking her to the depot to hear her to her new home at Princeton. All of the servants in the house were on the steps below, where all shook her hand in grateful remembrance, and in the eyes of her friends they were all as if in grief.

The ex-President did not remain more than three minutes in the Blue Parlor after he had accompanied President McKinley back to the White House after the latter's inauguration. He descended the long landing steps with a careful thought, rather than to tread. His journey was guarded with unusual care. He used his walking stick and stepped with both feet on each step of the stairway, thus descending very slowly. He was accompanied by Col. John M. Wilson. At the bottom of the stairs stood the Major, with Capt. Bailey B. Evans, late commander of the battleship Indiana, waiting, and the two were hurriedly driven to the wharf, where they boarded the Maple, a light-house tender, destined for the Allegheny Sound in North Carolina, where a fortnight will be spent in sport of the field and stream.

Mr. Cleveland's departure from the White House was not with the air of one who regretted his surrender of power and place, but more like one who was glad that his responsibilities had ceased. It was twelve years ago yesterday that he entered the Mansion, a stranger to the country. He went out in 1889, and returned in 1893. His retirement on March 4, 1897, will, in the opinion of his own party, be forever. Ex-President Cleveland left the city yesterday at 3:37 p. m. for the coast of North Carolina. Immediately after accompanying President McKinley from the Capitol to the White House, he was driven to the Eighteenth wharf, where he boarded the light-house tender Maple, which steamed down the Potomac. Mr. Cleveland was accompanied by Dr. Wood and Capt. Evans, U. S. A., the latter having been driven to the wharf with him in one of the White House carriages. Dr. Wood, who also accompanied the party, arrived at the wharf some time after the others, and went aboard the boat immediately.

The ex-President and Capt. Evans were expected at the wharf at 2 o'clock, but did not arrive until an hour and a half later. No minute was lost when in getting ready to cut loose, although Mr. Cleveland, as he went up the gangplank, said, "It is no use to hurry now."

The ex-President was unaccompanied by baggage of any kind. He was helped from the carriage by Mate William Mullin. In his hand he carried a heavy gold-colored cane, and with that he steadied himself as he walked up the gangplank. As Mr. Cleveland was hurriedly making his way up the gangplank he was asked that was his immediate point of destination. Without hesitating he said, "North Carolina and other places," and passed on and out of sight. An effort was made to learn from Capt. Lambert how long and where the trip would extend, but he said he was in total ignorance of the plans of the ex-President. He said, however, that he thought the trip would be continued for a week or ten days. He was also of the opinion that the first anchor the Maple would cast would be somewhere along the coast of North Carolina.

It was also stated that lunch had been prepared for the party and would be served as soon as the boat was under way. Dinner, it was said, would not be taken until 9 o'clock in the evening.

AT THE CAPITOL STAND.

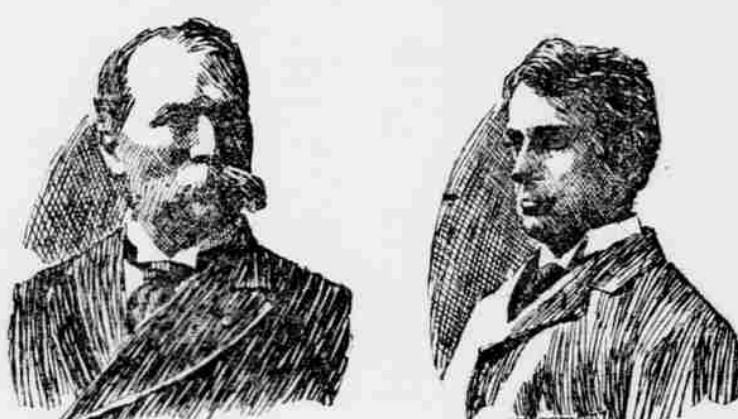

Characteristic Multitude Witnesses the Swearing-In Ceremony.

The crowds were enormous in the vicinity of the Capitol yesterday morning; they crushed up against the stand and waved hand in receding degrees of denseness until they straggled out into groups, couples, and finally were strings of pedestrians, tangles of human ribbons which had their beginnings no one could say where.

Big crowds were there, but not so big as expected. However, none of those who stood under the stand reserved for the privileged thought that there was any numerical deficiencies. Standing in the middle of the throng that blackened the plaza, it seemed as if there was nothing but a sea of upturned faces from the steps of the Capitol to the gold-crowned library palace. Everyone pushed and jostled, elbowing toward the stand in a persistently hopeless manner, but throughout kept in good humor.

The beginnings of the crowd assembled as early as 7 o'clock. A hundred or more were under the shadow of the stand by eight. They looked at each other sheepishly, and pretended not to believe that they had grabbed him—rather shortly by the forelock, but said nothing. It was very quiet up to 9 o'clock. Then the city below woke up. The growing hum swept up Capitol Hill and stirred the waters. In the distance might be heard the revolve of stout-lunged buglers, the roll of the assembly drum, or even the spirited music of early bandmen. Under the influence of this and the accumulating numbers, the crowd warmed up as it grew, and two hours before there was any hope of seeing the awaited spectacle the crevices of the groups of waiters had all filled up, and the gathering assumed the proportions of a multitude.

The police kept passages clear for the arrival of diplomats, Senators and their friends and the Executive, actual and elect, as they drove up under the arcade on the Senate side. The crowd was really very little cheering for Mr. Cleveland and Mr. McKinley; indeed, they seemed to be scarcely observed, and the cheering all went for others.

The crowd was full of the inevitable individuals. There was the always-without-a-gentleman, who, though all the other thousands of the crowd were really very little cheering for Mr. Cleveland and Mr. McKinley; indeed, they seemed to be scarcely observed, and the cheering all went for others.

CUBAN REBELS VERY ACTIVE

They Have Gained Several Important Victories Lately.

LARGE BODY CROSSED TROCHA

Texas Cowboys' Expedition Safely Landed in Pinar del Rio—Perfect Organization of the Insurgents in That Province—Weyler Daily Expected in Havana.

Havana, March 4.—Advices received here show that the rebels have been displaying great activity, and in several encounters sustained with the Spanish troops have obtained signal victories. Incomplete details received from Matanzas state that Gen. Garcia, with 3,000 men and three pieces of artillery, met Gen. Rey, with 1,300 men and three pieces of artillery, at Costanilla. A fierce fight resulted. Garcia, with his superior forces and better position, easily routed the Spaniards, inflicting heavy losses, estimated at 600, if not over.

Another report comes from Matanzas of a severe engagement on the 24th of February. Cayo Hilla, Mayra Rodriguez and Carrillo met Gen. Molina's forces and obtained a complete victory. Details are lacking, but it is only known that seventy-four wounded Spaniards were brought into Cienfuegos on stretchers. Many dead were left on the field.

SCENES ON THE STREETS.

No Superabundance of Enthusiasm Evidenced by the Crowds.

The inauguration visitor arose early yesterday and looked eagerly eastward. There, flooding the dome of the Capitol and coloring the windows with yellow light, ruffled the flags, first breeze enough to lazily and fitfully unfurl and show them a patch of vivid color against the unclouded blue of the spring skies.

Nature never smiled upon a President more sweetly. "The March sun felt like May" and diffused a salutary, cheering effect upon the visitors promenading the Avenue. The flocks followed the crowds, crying their wares, importuning the passer-by to purchase the "only original McKinley badge," the "official program," or some little valueless trinket or ornament. One fellow had some Democratic rosettes rampant, unsold from the last inauguration. He had painted the sign "Dead" upon them, and then upside down and was looking in a drowsy strain, "Grover, Grover, it's all over."

The rural visitor was quite a feature in the crowds upon the streets. He could usually be found around the little push carts, eating the festive peanut or indulging in the luxury of the real fresh banana. He usually came in pairs or groups and walked in leisurely wonderment about the streets, a cheap cigar between his lips and an "ain't I just too wicked for anything" expression upon his face.

The stands and sidewalks began to fill shortly before 10 o'clock and half an hour before the north side of the Avenue was fairly crowded. There was no great crush at any point on the thoroughfare, with the possible exception of the Seventh street corner. The stands had great vacant gaps in the tiers of seats. The windows and balconies were comfortably filled but not to a capacity-testing extent. There was undoubtedly a great crowd, but not as many as were expected.

The throng thinned closer against the house as the hour of the column of the President's escort appeared upon the Avenue. The decorated goat accompanying the blue-jackets from the flagship New York caused a little ripple of laughter to pass along the line. Outside of this no applause greeted the long line of troops until the "Black Horse Cavalry," President McKinley's personal escort, appeared, and then it was hard to tell whether the slight demonstration was intended for the President or the troops.

President McKinley received cordially but not enthusiastically. He was flanked by the crowd in the Lafayette Square stand, received something short of an ovation from the Treasury officials, and was applauded and cheered when he passed the principal reviewing stands. Those people had paid their money and came from a distance to see the President, and they cheered when they did see him, but the crowds on the sidewalks, those who could not afford to pay for a seat and stood for several hours in the place waiting for the parade, showed no enthusiasm. They would feely join in with the stands as the President passed and then relapse into a silent, passive, sight-seeing crowd.

The parade itself was hardly the most impressive feature of the day. The methods he used to control the police and get the line of the line, only to be caught and cast out, seemed to please those on the sidewalks better than any part of the parade. They would suggest schemes to him, put an officer on his track, and then laugh heartily to see him and his machine chased down by a big policeman.

After the procession passed the crowd broke through the ropes and filled the streets for a few moments. The sidewalks were cleared sufficiently for the ordinary traffic in the short time.

There were no cries shouted at the President, as is usual upon such occasions. No one called out "Howdy, Bill" or "Glad to see you, Mac." The man who makes humorous comments was not in evidence, and the whole was about the quietest crowd that ever saw a Presidential drive to the Capitol to take his oath of office.

LILUOKALANISAW THE PARADE

Recognized by President McKinley From His Carriage.

Ex-Queen Liluokalanisaw, of Hawaii, with her suite, witnessed the inaugural ceremonies at the Senate yesterday from a seat in the diplomatic gallery, tendered her by Secretary Olney and Senator Sherman, and later viewed the parade from a vantage point on the fifth floor of the Central National Bank building, corner of Pomeroy avenue and Market square. She was attended at both places by her suite. She was gowned in black satin, with diamond ornaments.

The party left the Capitol at 10:30 o'clock, and in a closed carriage proceeded to the Capitol. Arriving there, the queen went to the Senate gallery and witnessed the ceremonies incident to the administering of the oath of office to the incoming Vice President. Thereafter the ex-queen and party went immediately to the Central National Bank building, preceding the lead of the parade by only a few moments.

Manager Sherman, of the Cairo, in which the ex-queen has her apartments, had secured for her and party a commodious room in the northwest corner of the building, and here they made themselves comfortable in the wide view window, from which an excellent view was had up the Avenue as far as Twelfth street. They were all somewhat fatigued and hungry from their long wait at the Capitol, and at once ordered sandwiches, coffee and apple pie, the two secretaries further indulging in two-for-a-quarter cigars.

The ex-queen was deeply interested in the magnificent panorama before her, and freely commented on the various organizations appearing in the parade. The naval organizations seemed to especially interest her, in view of the fact that the "jolly jacks" had not been known quantities in her former high estate.

The profusion of color in the various uniforms pleased her, for, although she is not unfamiliar with military display, she never witnessed anything in the martial line of such magnificence and magnitude as the parade of yesterday.

An interesting incident of the parade occurred when President McKinley passed the bank building. He had for some few moments before passing the building been observed to doff his hat to the cheering multitudes, and when opposite ex-Queen Liluokalanisaw he raised his hat and bowed several times.

When the last organization had passed, the ex-queen and party left the building and returned directly to the Cairo.

MONEY AND ARBITRATION

Views of New York Chamber of Commerce Thereon.

ASK ADMINISTRATION'S AID

Pathetic Plea for Legislative Establishment and Maintenance of a Single Gold Standard—Admission of Present Unsatisfactory Conditions.

New York, March 4.—At its meeting today the Chamber of Commerce has submitted to it the correspondence between its president, A. E. Orr, and ex-President Cleveland, relating to the scheme for banqueting the latter, which fell through.

On the subject of the reform of the currency, John Hansen Rhoades, chairman of the special committee appointed at the last regular meeting of the chamber to confer with the new administration and urge the consideration of the currency question at the contemplated special session of Congress, submitted a copy of a letter on the subject the committee had addressed to President-elect McKinley. The letter says in part:

"We think we reflect the conviction which obtains with many who attended the sound money convention at Indianapolis that laws which would provide for more even distribution of currency would disarm the arguments which have driven many Western and Southern voters into the free silver camp, and it is, therefore, deemed of the utmost importance that the financial question be considered in the extra session. If no steps can be taken to revise our banking and currency laws until Congress meets in regular session, we fear that nothing will be accomplished in time to deplete the ranks of the free silver party of such voters, who have no special interest in silver, and no special love for it, excepting that, in their minds, it would remedy the scarcity of circulating medium from which their section suffers, and we will stand in danger of the lower House of the Fifty-sixth Congress containing a majority of free silver men."

"We desire again to call your attention to the serious condition of the mercantile and industrial interests of the country and the need for speedy relief. This committee believes that while lack of revenue has done much to impair the credit of the government, the evils existing have a deeper root than this, and that the long and continued effort to force silver legislation, the constant and persistent attacks on capital and corporations all over the country, the apparent desire in many sections to restrict the collections of debts, and the existence of badly regulated currency and banking laws, have all done their full share in bringing on the existing condition of mercantile depression.

"The process of liquidation in the country is about complete. Forced economy has reduced the expenditures of the people and squeezed the water out of speculative enterprises. The shelves of the merchants are carrying reduced stocks. The cost of living has decreased, and we stand ready to enter upon a period of market prosperity, thus the entire country waits upon the action of the government, pleading that with sufficient revenue we shall also have sound monetary system, and opportunity to follow will quiet the dissatisfied and disarm the repudiationists.

"With all the anxieties of the leaders of the Republican party will be immediately removed, and let it not be forgotten that this party owes much of its success in the late election to the patriotic efforts of those who had formerly been its opponents. Those men who so voted look with confidence to the incoming administration for the prompt readjustment of our currency system, through which alone they believe that confidence can be restored and permanent prosperity follow.

"For this reason and many others of equal importance, we respectfully urge upon you that the monetary question shall receive the serious attention of Congress at the coming extra session, and that the people of the country have been led to believe will be called by you after your inauguration. In our judgment, the need of such legislation is imperative, the danger of delay increasingly great."

Resolutions were unanimously adopted, urging the United States Senate to ratify at an early day the arbitration treaty between the United States and England. The resolutions declare that the advancing civilization of the world, and all business interests of this country, make it wise to avail ourselves of the opportunity to try the experiment of the substitution of law in place of war between the two countries who are alike in language and tradition, and who have the same methods of legal procedure, the same rules of evidence, the same legal authorities, and the same respect for legal decisions.

WOMEN NEED MORE REST

There is no doubt of the fact that the greatest fault of the American woman is her predisposition to unnatural activity. She does not rest enough—sometimes does not rest at all. When she is tired, she is detected abroad by their energy and their lack of repose, if not by their good looks and tasteful dress.

"They seem to be always afraid of missing something," said an observant Frenchman in discussing them. "When they come here they want to look at everything, the exterior of things isn't enough for them—they want interiors, they don't even abhor the steps that lead to them. From the time they leave their native shores they never get back. When they are tired they sit forward on the edge of their seats, they seem to think that in this way they are propelling the horses, and that they will reach their destination quicker."

The prescription for recuperation from excess and exhaustion and all other ills is rest—the rest cure in a mild form. You will be told to make an attempt to go, as it were, of all your muscles. "Play," as the children say, "as if you were drunk." With-draw your will, even from the tips of your fingers, and let your arms drop how and where they please. If you are fond of exercising you will have found that floating is the most perfect mode of rest, except for the matter of keeping air in the lungs. The body is everywhere supported by the water, and one doesn't beat down on it.

When the last organization had passed, the ex-queen and party left the building and returned directly to the Cairo.

HOBBS

PILLS

Their Sale in Washington and Vicinity Has Reached Enormous Dimensions.

HUNDREDS OF BOXES SOLD YESTERDAY.

Think of hundreds of boxes of Dr. Hobbs' Sparagus Kidney Pills being sold in Washington in a single day. And this of a medicine that was little heard of in this vicinity a few weeks ago. No amount of advertising could produce such marvelous sales. Those who have used this remedy have received such benefit that they recommend it to their friends; that together with the open, frank, and honest manner of its introduction, is the proper explanation of its success.

It is vitally important to good health that the kidneys should be in perfect order. Hundreds upon hundreds of the ailments that humanity suffers from originate from the fact that the human purifiers of the blood are not performing their work properly, and, like anything else that is out of order, should be repaired.

If you are a sufferer from backache, rheumatism, gout, general muscular weakness, neuralgia, headache, nervous exhaustion, or generally run down, go to your druggist at once, and make the best investment you ever made in your life for 50 cents. Get a box of Dr. Hobbs' Sparagus Kidney Pills from your druggist, and in a week's time you will have undergone a change for the better that will surprise you.

Greatly Benefited After 14 Years of Suffering.

A reporter called on Mr. E. C. Coope, of No. 329 Straight street, Grand Rapids, Mich., who in reply to his question told the following regarding Dr. Hobbs' Sparagus Kidney Pills:

"I have suffered for fourteen years with kidney trouble, and have been treated for rheumatism by a number of physicians; also taken a large quantity of patent medicines without improvement. In fact, I got worse, getting so bad that I have been unable to leave the house for the past two years. I have had such dreadful pain across my back and in my right limb. I have been unable to bend my right knee. My hands and feet were swollen to twice their normal size and I was compelled to use soap to move around. I began to take Dr. Hobbs' Sparagus Kidney Pills six days ago, and reduced my marked change at once, as you see, the swelling has disappeared from my hands and feet and the pain has left me entirely. I walked six blocks yesterday without much trouble, a thing I have been unable to do for two years. I believe now I will again be a well man and can safely say that Dr. Hobbs' Sparagus Kidney Pills are the only remedy that has ever given me satisfaction. I heartily recommend them to all who suffer as I have."

"Are Women Human Beings?"

As early as the sixth century the woman question was a knotty problem, puzzling the wise men of that period. "Are Women Human Beings?" was the starting inquiry proposed by a bishop at the famous council of Maastricht, and several sessions were devoted to the consideration of this important subject. The point was not considered jocular or frivolous, and the good fathers earnestly and gravely undertook the task of assigning to woman her proper place in creation. They finally decided that she did not belong to the "world of mortals, beavers, or zoots," but was, in reality, a human being. This decision was made only after some of a struggle. As it was not an ecclesiastical council, the faithful were advised that the decision was not binding on them.
